III

次の英文を読んで、設問に答えなさい。

Martha handed Jason a purple balloon. “Get well soon!”

She was his third visitor. That’s because she was the teacher’s daughter, and her mother made her. The other two, John and Eric, weren’t really his friends, although they often ganged up with him against other kids to get their lunch money.

Jason knew he wouldn’t have long to live. He could feel it, deep inside. Seeing his grandmother cry after talking with the doctor confirmed it. His time had come. He didn’t tell his visitors, though. They would either pity him or be happy to get rid of him.

Once Martha left, he ripped a page off his notebook and wrote:

“Dear God, I know I messed up and nobody likes me. Please give me a second chance. I can show you what a good friend I can be.”

He drew a map showing the way from the church to the hospital, walked shakily to the window, and let the balloon fly away, carrying his message toward God.

The balloon headed straight to a telephone pole, but a gentle breeze blew it away just in time. It crossed path with a duck family and disappeared out of view.

The next day, a girl he had never met before came to visit him. “I find balloon,” she said. “You are lonely?”

He just nodded, too startled to talk.

“I lonely too. My family come from Afghanistan and I no speak English good.” She smiled. “I bring you gift.” She handed him a box of chocolates. “I pray for friend, and God give me friend.”

Normally, he would have made fun of her broken English and her long brown robe, but he knew better. He smiled and offered her the first chocolate.
